I would like to welcome you and your student to Along, a digital reflection tool that helps educators make each student feel seen and understood. Along lets students share quick reflections one-on-one with me so they can open up about who they are and what's really on their mind—without peer pressure.

Here's how it works:

1. I will send a reflection question, like “What is something or someone in your life you are grateful for and why?” by recording a short video or audio message. I will include my own response to the question so students know what I am thinking.
2. Upon receiving my reflection, each student responds to the reflection question by recording a video or audio message or by sending a written response. Students won't be able to see each other's videos or messages, so they can really be themselves.
3. I will then review and briefly reply to each student's response.

If at any point you have concerns about your student's participation, or if you would like to request access to your student's communication activity on Along, reach out to the educator using Along with your student.
